Symposium Will Convene Nation's Health Information Technology Leaders to Discuss Progress, Barriers toward Full Interoperability

The Healthcare Leadership Council – comprised of chief executives from leading companies in every health sector -- will host a symposium this week in Washington, D.C. to examine health industry progress in advancing data interoperability and the barriers that still exist in achieving a nationwide interoperable health information infrastructure.

Leaders in health information technology will join respected healthcare providers in discussing prospects for achieving nationwide interoperability by the December 2018 deadline established by the Medicare Access and CHIP Reauthorization Act (MACRA). Participants include:

- Mary R. Grealy, President, Healthcare Leadership Council
- Neil de Crescenzo, CEO, Change Healthcare (moderator)
- Jitin Asnaani, Executive Director, CommonWell Health Alliance
- Jamie Ferguson, VP, Health IT Strategy & Policy, Kaiser Permanente
- Marc Probst, CIO, Intermountain Healthcare
- Marshall Ruffin, Start-up Founder, former EVP & CTO of Inova Health System
- Micky Tripathi, President & CEO, Massachusetts eHealth Collaborative
- Mariann Yeager, CEO, The Sequoia Project

When: Thursday, April 20
12:00 p.m. – 2:00 p.m.

Where: Reserve Officers Association, One Constitution Avenue, NE, Washington, DC

The event is open to the media. To RSVP, contact Kelly Fernandez at kfernandez@hlc.org.
